
Notes on contributors

Mahmood Reza Atai is associate professor of applied linguistics at Kharazmi University, Tehran, Iran, where he has taught graduate courses including ESP, curriculum planning & syllabus design and teaching methodologies since 2000. He is also editor and director of the Iranian Journal of Applied Linguistics and head of the ELT & ESP Department at SAMT Organization, Iranian Ministry of Science, Research and Technology. His research basically addresses EAP issues including genre-based pedagogy, needs analysis and teacher education. His recent papers have appeared in Reading in a Foreign Language, System, Computer Assisted Language Learning, RELC Journal, Innovation in Language Learning and Teaching, The Curriculum Journal, Taiwan International ESP Journal and Asian ESP Journal. He has published four EAP textbooks for Iranian university students. Email: atai@khu.ac.ir

Esmat Babaii is assistant professor of applied linguistics at Kharazmi University, Iran, where she teaches research methods, language assessment and discourse analysis to graduate and undergraduate students. She has served on the editorial boards and/or the review panels of several international journals. She has published articles and book chapters dealing with issues in Systemic Functional Linguistics, test-taking processes, English for Academic Purposes, and critical approaches to the study of culture and language. Email: ebabaii@gmail.com

Alexandra Bagasheva completed her PhD in 2004 and has been working since then as Principal Lecturer in General Linguistics and Psycholinguistics at the Department of English and American Studies of Sofia University “St. Kliment Ohridski”. Her main interests are in the fields of cognitive linguistics, meta-linguistics, word-formation, more specifically compounding and lexical semantics, and problems in teaching introductory courses in General Linguistics. She is a member of the International Cognitive Linguistics Association, the Bulgarian Society for British Studies and the Bulgarian American Studies Association. She is co-author of the new Bulgarian-English (2009) and English-Bulgarian Dictionary (forthcoming) and of a textbook Analyzing English Grammar (for advanced students of English and American Studies). Her most recent publication is a monograph entitled Reflections on Compound Verbs and Compounding. Email: abagasheva@gmail.com

Sibo Chen is currently graduate student at the School of Communication, Simon Fraser University, Canada. He received his MA degree in Applied Linguistics from the Department of Linguistics, University of Victoria, Canada. His major research interests include corpus linguistics, discourse analysis, and interaction between language and communication. More specifically, his research examines how corpus linguistics methods can be applied to educational and media research, as well as how promotional culture is utilized in professional genres. He has also served as submission reviewer for Asian ESP Journal. Email: sibo.noah.chen@gmail.com

Yu-Ling Chung received her PhD in Translation Studies from the Centre for Translation and Comparative Cultural Studies at the University of Warwick in 2008. Now she teaches in Taiwan, as assistant professor in the Department of Applied Foreign Languages, National Taiwan University of Science and Technology. Her fields of academic interest include Translation Studies, the literary study of the Bible, fantasy literature, Animations, Comics and Games, journalism, and media practices. Her recent publication is Translation and Fantasy Literature in Taiwan (Palgrave Macmillan). The research project she is carrying out is exploring the empirical embodiment of translators' cognition and habitus in Taiwan. Email: yuling@mail.ntust.edu.tw

Sabrina Bonqueves Fadanelli is from Caxias do Sul, RS, Brazil. She graduated in Languages (Portuguese and English), and also completed a post-graduation course in Learning and Teaching English, both at the University of Caxias do Sul (UCS) in the south of Brazil. After working as an interpreter and English/Portuguese teacher in Italy and England, she recently acquired a Master degree in Applied Linguistics at the University of Birmingham, UK. Her areas of interest and study are issues related to translation and interpretation, research involving variations of the English spoken in Brazil, and Corpus Linguistics research on language acquisition. She currently teaches technical and graduation courses at the Faculdade de Tecnologia (FTEC), a technical college in Caxias do Sul, RS, Brazil. Email: sabrina_mina2006@hotmail.com

Viviana Gaballo is Assistant Professor in English Language and Translation at the University of Macerata, Italy. She has been teaching ESP and specialized translation at the university and secondary school levels since 1992, and has also been working as a teacher trainer. She has published and presented papers at international conferences in areas related to Linguistics (Critical Discourse Analysis; Corpus Linguistics; linguistic variation; lexicography), Applied Linguistics (CLIL – Content and Language Integrated Learning; CALL/CALT – Computer-Assisted Language Teaching and Learning) and Translation Studies (translation competence; collaborative translation; specialized translation). She is the author of the Systemic-Functional Translation Competence model, outlined in her edited volume English in Translation Studies: Methodological Perspectives (2009). Email: viviana.gaballo@unimc.it

Mohammad Reza Hashemi is assistant professor of applied linguistics at Kharazmi University, Iran. He has published papers in international as well as domestic journals. His research interests include mixed methods research in applied linguistics, teacher education, and ELT materials development. Email: hashemi_ili@yahoo.com

Ineta Luka, PhD, is associate professor and head of the Foreign Languages Department of Turība University, Latvia. She is also senior researcher of the Institute of Pedagogical Sciences of the University of Latvia. Her academic interests are connected with teaching English for Special Purposes for tourism students and English and Pedagogy for PhD students. Her research interests encompass promoting language competence and intercultural competence, lifelong learning, adult language teaching-learning, and the quality of higher education. She is author of a monograph on language learning aspects, co-author of a book on intercultural competence, and co-author of a course book for teaching Latvian to foreigners. She has published numerous scientific papers and she also has experience in international and local projects connected with language education and lifelong learning. She is a member of the Editorial Board of Journal of Education, Culture and Society. Email: ineta.luka@inbox.lv

Elisa Mattiello holds a PhD in English Linguistics from the University of Pisa, where she teaches courses of English Linguistics and ESP for undergraduate and postgraduate students. Her main scientific interests are in the fields of morphology, sociolinguistics, and varieties. Her primary focus of interest is English slang, which is the topic of her monograph An Introduction to English Slang: A Description of its Morphology, Semantics and Sociology (Polimetrica, 2008) and of various articles published in national and international journals or volumes. Recently, her research has expanded in the direction of ESP, with the publication of the articles “Nominalization in English and Italian normative legal texts” (ESP Across Cultures VII, 2010) and “Translating the lexicon of the law: A cross-linguistic study of De Franchis’s Law Dictionary” (Cambridge Scholars Publishing, 2012). Her Extra-grammatical Morphology in English: Abbreviations, Blends, Reduplicatives, and Related Phenomena will be published by Mouton de Gruyter in 2013. Email: e.mattiello@angl.unipi.it

Hossein Talebzadeh is currently a PhD candidate of applied linguistics at Tarbiat Modares University, Tehran, Iran. He has taught undergraduate courses including linguistics and teaching methodologies at Kharazmi University. His research interests are genre analysis and discourse analysis and his recent paper has appeared in TELL. He has also co-authored two EAP textbooks for university students and has presented papers in international and national conferences. Email: hossein_talebzadeh@yahoo.com

Pei Lee Yeoh is a lecturer at the Faculty of Social Sciences and Liberal Arts of UCSI University, Malaysia, where she teaches applied linguistics to undergraduate students. She holds a LL.B (Hons) (University of London), Certificate in Legal Practice (Malaysia), and M.Ed (TESL) (University of Malaya). She is currently a Ph.D

candidate with the Faculty of Linguistics and Languages, University of Malaya. Her dissertation focuses on the role of counterdiscourse in delegitimizing the genetically modified organisms (GMOs) issue. Her research interests are in critical discourse analysis, cognitive linguistics, risk communication, political communication, and media discourses. Because her research inclines towards interdisciplinarity, her presentation of research at international conferences intersects linguistics with media, cognition, law, and gender studies. Prior to her academic career, she was a lawyer in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, where the focus of her practice was on civil matters. Email: yeohpeilee@yahoo.com