
Notes on contributors

Siân Alsop is a PhD student in the Department of English and Languages at Coventry University, UK. She is currently examining the Engineering Lecture Corpus (ELC, www.coventry.ac.uk/elc). Her thesis identifies and describes core and culturally-determined pragmatic features in the ELC, looking at which are fundamental to the lecture, which are restricted to certain cultures, and which are realized differently in different cultural contexts. Prior to doctoral study, Siân completed BA and MA studies in English Literature at the University of Warwick, and worked in various project management and research roles, including as an assistant on the British Academic Written English Corpus (BAWE, www.coventry.ac.uk/bawe). Email: alsops@uni.coventry.ac.uk

Seyyed Asadollah Asadi is a PhD candidate in TEFL at Kharazmi University, Tehran, Iran. He has been teaching EFL writing and reading courses as well as foreign language teaching methodology to undergraduate students at Kharazmi University since 2007. His research interests include EFL teacher education, ESP course design, and EFL program evaluation. Email: asad_100_10@yahoo.com

Marie-Lise Assier is a lecturer at the University Paul Sabatier Toulouse 3 in Toulouse. She is a member of a laboratory specializing in language learning and teaching – LAIRDIL (Laboratoire interuniversitaire de recherche en didactique des langues). Her research is based on a cross-cultural and multi-disciplinary approach. She is particularly interested in the traces of beliefs and behaviours contained in language which can affect professional practices, especially in the fields of health and medicine. Studying FASP (fiction with a professional substratum) helps her investigate the links between language, culture and health sciences. As she is qualified in traditional Chinese medicine practice, she also works on the similarities between therapeutic and educational relations. Email: marie-lise.assier@univ-tlse3.fr

Mahmood Reza Atai is associate professor of applied linguistics at Kharazmi University, Tehran, Iran and editor of Iranian Journal of Applied Linguistics. His research interests include ESP, needs assessment, genre analysis, and EAP reading comprehension instruction. He has published on EAP issues extensively in national and international journals. He has also co-authored four EAP textbooks for Iranian university students. Email: atai@khu.ac.ir

Donna Bain Butler (PhD) is a Fulbright Specialist in Applied Linguistics-TEFL at American University's Washington College of Law. She designs and teaches ESP/EAP

courses for international graduate students and scholars aiming for professional proficiency (and higher) in speaking and writing. She advances literacy by building on learners' existing competences with linguistic and sociocultural knowledge, explicit strategies instruction, and research-based materials for self-regulation in (professional and academic) writing. Email: dbbutler@wcl.american.edu

Shahabaddin Behtary, lecturer in ELT, has been teaching for 12 years in the Department of English at Islamic Azad University in Ardabil, Iran. He specializes in research methods and language assessment and is a frequent presenter at world conferences. His last three papers were at CEREIS 2011, Italy, ACTA 2012, Australia, and TBLT 2013, Canada. He has been the supervisor, co-supervisor and examiner of more than 70 MA theses and has various publications in the form of books, articles in refereed journals and chapters in books. He is currently working on a research project devoted to the evaluation of the efficiency of General English course. Email: behtary@yahoo.com

Oana Carciu is a junior researcher in the InterLAE Research Group currently working on her doctoral thesis within the PhD programme in English Studies at the University of Zaragoza, Spain. Her doctoral thesis focuses on author voice and its intercultural and cross-linguistic variation in biomedical research articles to account for the context of international English-medium research publication which entails rhetorical accommodation in the case of Spanish scholars. Her research interests span written academic discourse and genre analysis, particularly the research article genre, in association with corpus linguistics methods and the study of written ELF (English as a Lingua Franca). Email: ocarciu@unizar.es

Shirley Carter-Thomas is Professor of English linguistics at Institut Mines - Telecom (Télécom Ecole de Management), France, and a member of the CNRS research team LATTICE. She gives courses in research methodology and academic writing to international graduate students. Her research areas span functional and contrastive linguistics, corpus linguistics, ESP and writing pedagogy. With Alex Boulton and Elizabeth Rowley-Jolivet, she co-edited Corpus-informed Research and Learning in ESP: Issues and Applications (John Benjamins) in 2012. Email: shirley.thomas@telecom-em.eu

Mehran Davaribina is an assistant professor in Applied Linguistics. He has published articles in national and international journals and has widely attended national and international conferences on Applied Linguistics. He is currently teaching undergraduate as well as MA courses in the English department at Islamic Azad University, Ardabil, Iran. He has supervised a great number of MA theses and projects. He has published a number of research projects at university level to evaluate ongoing programs and curricula and has authored and co-authored four books including Prerequisite English Course. His research interests include program evaluation as well as reading and writing skills. Email: davaribina@hotmail.com

Carmel Heah (Phd) is a Senior Lecturer at the Language and Communication Centre in the School of Humanities and Social Sciences, Nanyang Technological University. She teaches communication skills and academic writing courses at the Centre. Her research interests are LSP, discipline-specific writing, and use of Web 2.0 technology in teaching and learning. Email: CLHHeah@ntu.edu.sg

Dr Sujata S. Kathpalia (PhD) is a Senior Lecturer at the Language and Communication Centre in the School of Humanities and Social Sciences, Nanyang Technological University. She teaches courses in communication skills as well as academic writing. Her research interest is in the areas of discourse analysis, discipline-specific writing and second language teaching. Email: msskath@ntu.edu.sg

Emma Moreton is a Senior Lecturer in the Department of English and Languages at Coventry University, UK, where she teaches undergraduate and postgraduate modules in stylistics and corpus linguistics. Emma has a BA in literature from De Montfort University, Leicester and an MPhil(B) in corpus linguistics from the University of Birmingham. She is currently in the final year of her PhD at the University of Birmingham, where she is looking at the design and annotation of correspondence corpora. Emma has been project manager on two JISC (Joint Information Systems Committee) funded projects which explored the use of visualization tools for use with corpora and she is currently CI (Chief Investigator) on an AHRC (Arts and Humanities Research Council) research networking project which focuses on the digitization and annotation of historical letter collections (see: cuba.coventry.ac.uk/correspondence_corpora). Email: aa0282@coventry.ac.uk

Hilary Nesi is Professor in English Language in the Department of English and Languages at Coventry University, UK. Her research activities largely concern the discourse of English for academic purposes, and the design and use of dictionaries and reference tools for academic contexts. She was Chief Academic Advisor for the EASE series of multimedia EAP speaking and listening materials, and has recently led an ESRC (Economic and Social Research) funded project to produce online academic writing materials for the British Council 'Learn English' website. Hilary was principal investigator for the project to create the BASE corpus of British Academic Spoken English (2001–2005), and for the project to create the BAWE corpus: 'An Investigation of Genres of Assessed Writing in British Higher Education' (2004 – 2007). She is leading the development of the Engineering Lecture Corpus (ELC). Email: h.nesi@coventry.ac.uk

Elizabeth Rowley-Jolivet is a member of the Laboratoire Ligérien de Linguistique and of the professional association Mediterranean Editors and Translators. Her research interests cover genre analysis in ESP, oral, written and visual communication in scientific English, the use of corpora in ESP, and web-mediated discourse. She has recently co-edited two volumes: Corpus-informed Research and Learning in ESP: Issues and Applications (John Benjamins 2012) and Evolving Genres in Web-mediated Communication (Peter Lang 2012). Email: elizabeth.jolivet@univ-orleans.fr

Maria Grazia Sindoni (PhD) is Assistant Professor in English Language and Translation at the Dipartimento di Civiltà Antiche e Moderne (former Faculty of Arts and Humanities), University of Messina, Italy. Her research interests include systemic-functional grammar, testing and assessment, variation in speech and writing, corpus linguistics, multimodality, Creole Studies, language planning and language policy. She has published extensively in national and international journals and written four books. She is editor of the journal Quaderni di Ricerca del Centro Linguistico d'Ateneo Messinese and reviewer of Journal of Education, Informatics and Cybernetics. Her most recent book is Spoken and Written Discourse in Online Interactions. A Multimodal Approach (Routledge 2013). Email: mgsindoni@unime.it

Michael Wei (PhD) is an Associate Professor and Program Director of the TESOL program, School of Education, University of Missouri – Kansas City. His most recent publications appeared in TESOL Journal, Learning Environments Research, Journal of Language Teaching and Learning, Asian Journal of English Language Teaching, The Journal of Asian TEFL, Foreign Language Teaching Theory and Practice, and Journal of Language and Linguistics. His research interests include learning English to near native-like proficiency, reading/writing English as a second or foreign language, learning environments, early second language development, perception of English stops, second language acquisition, and translation between Chinese and English. Email: weiyou@umkc.edu

Yalun Zhou (PhD) is an Assistant Professor at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. Her research interests are instructed second language acquisition, contexts of second language acquisition, and technology use in second language education. She also develops foreign language learning materials and designs foreign language curriculum using game-mediated or game-based immersive learning materials. Email: zhouy12@rpi.edu